Jakey at this moment came around the house in a fashion at which he had become expert at school. This was turning handsprings sideways like a cart wheel. Seeing the soldiers, he suddenly remembered his dignity as former volunteer aid-de-camp, and straightening up pulled his hat down over the back of his head and tried to look military. True, his hair was in his eyes, but his military training had only been for one morning, and Jakey's hair was always in his eyes. Doubtless it would have required months of training from a drill sergeant to get it to growing any other way. Approaching the fence, he climbed it and sat with one leg on each side of it.

"Do ye know me, me boy?" asked Ratigan.

"Does I know one o' them signal lights on th' mounting?"

"Oh, Jakey!" sighed his sister.

"Well, me lad," pursued the corporal, laughing, "who am I?"

"Rats."

"I see ye have a good memory, Rats. It's quare ye should have remembered that." And the corporal chuckled good naturedly.

"Mebbe y' remember some un's name."

"And who is that?"

"Miss Baggs."

"Certainly I do," said the corporal, somewhat startled and confused.

"I sor her t'other day."

"Ye don't mean it!"

"Reckon I do."

"Where?"

"She war a-trottin thet ole critter o' hern, goin no'th like shot from a squirrel gun."

"Upon me word!" ejaculated the corporal, evidently much interested.

"Reckon she war up ter somep'n."

"What makes ye think so?" And Ratigan changed his position in his saddle uneasily.

"Waal, when we uns met her"—

"Oh, Jakey, please don't say we uns," interrupted Souri.

"Waal, when we met her outen th' reach o' you uns (Souri gave a despairing look, but said nothing) she talked peart nuff, 'n she knowed me, too, but when she passed me on th' road t'other day no'th o' th' Union army she only stared at me through her goggle eyes 'n didn't say nothin nohow."

"And what do ye suppose that was for?"

"Reckon she war in a hurry 'bout somep'n 'n didn't want ter stop 'n talk or nothin."

[illegible]

"I asked her ef I c'd give her love ter Rats when I sor him."

Corporal Ratigan's Irish good nature triumphed over his desire to reach down and give the boy a cuff. Jakey's countenance was solemn, as usual, and did not break into a smile in response to the corporal's embarrassed laugh. He opened the gate, and Ratigan rode into the yard, followed by his troopers. They refreshed themselves from a gourd which hung in the wellhouse; then, filling their canteens, they rode away.

But Souri and Jakey were destined soon to meet one who was of far more consequence to both than Corporal Ratigan. The next morning while Souri was setting the house to rights she heard the beating of innumerable horses' hoofs. Going to the window and looking up the road which stretched northward for a long distance, in full view she saw a column of cavalry approaching.

Before the head of the column had reached the house the whole Slack family were standing in the yard gaping. Two regiments passed, though each seemed like an army, for cavalry occupies three or four times the space of infantry. Between the second and third regiments was a gap of a few hundred yards. In this rode an officer especially noticeable for his youth and manly beauty, attended by his staff and escort. On approaching the Slack cabin he motioned to these to go on, and wheeling his horse from the road unattended rode up to the party of lookers on. Jakey, who was standing on the fence, gave a spring and was caught in his arms.

"Aha, little brother, we meet again."

But there were others to engage the speaker's attention. Dropping the boy to the ground, he dismounted and was soon warmly shaking all by the hand.

"Yer Mark Malone, I reckon," said Farmer Slack, "though y' don't look much like the common sojer as kem long hyar a year ago 'n changed yer uniform fo' our Henery's store clothes."

"Not Mark Malone—that was a fictitious name—but Mark Maynard. No, I'm not a private any longer. I command this brigade. And it's a splendid body of men. I'm proud of it."

When Colonel Maynard came to salute Souri, there was an unspeakable interest, sympathy, even tenderness, in her expressive eyes.

"Why, Souri, you're a woman. How you have improved!"

A slight flush on her cheeks showed the pleasure the words gave her.

"Hain't I improved?" asked Jakey.

"Improved? Certainly. Have you conquered your old habit of answering people with questions?"

"Did I lick Johnny? Oh, yes," suddenly recollecting himself. "I purty nigh got over thet."

"So I perceive," said the colonel, smiling. "You're a perfect paragon at expressing yourself."

"Won't yer come in 'n set down?" asked Mrs. Slack.

"Not now. I am going to meet my wife, whom I have not seen for nearly a year. I expect to find her at her mother's plantation near Chattanooga. You remember how she hid me when my neck was in a halter on that very plantation; how I came north in disguise with her; how I came here one night, where I had left my horse and uniform, and dashed away to the Union lines; how she followed me, and we were married by a chaplain. Well, I've never seen her since a week after our marriage. Old Pap is famous for not allowing women in camp, and he made no exception in Mrs. Maynard's case except for one week's honeymoon in recognition of service rendered the cause."

"And yer wife's gone back onter the plantation?" said Mrs. Slack.

"She has. You see, in June a recruit entered our family quarters in the shape of a ten pounder boy. Before that happened Mrs. Maynard went through the lines to join her mother, Mrs. Fain. As the youngster is not old enough to report to his father since his enlistment, I suppose his father will have to report to him."

"I reckon Mrs. Maynard'll be right glad to see you," remarked Souri feelingly.

"I shall certainly be right glad to see her. And that must account for my leaving you so soon. I owe you all a great deal in this household, and now that our forces occupy the country, if you require anything, let me know it. What can I do for you?"

There was silence for a few moments, which was broken by Mrs. Slack.

"Waal, now, colonel, d'ye know I hain't had a cup o' coffee fo' nigh onter a year?"

"You shall have some as soon as I can reach my commissary. Anything else?"

Souri frowned even at the request of her mother, and no one named any other requirement.

"Jakey," said the colonel, "you haven't forgotten how, when I went through here a year ago, I asked you to go with me on my way to Chattanooga to get information of the movements of the Confederate army?"

"Hev I forgot when I war yer aid-der-camp? Oh, no, no, I hain't forgot."

"Well, I hadn't much inducement to offer you then unless the sharing of a prison may be called an inducement. Now, if you will go along, I'll promise you the best that Mrs. Maynard can provide at the plantation. Will you go?"

"Will I? Course I will. Paw, can I hev Tom?"

"Sartin, boy," and the farmer turned and went to the barn.

"Won't you need a—a luncheon?" asked Souri, whose hesitation was an effort to avoid the word "snack," the only name she had known for a cold bite before she went north to school.

"Oh, no," said the colonel. "We shall ride directly to the plantation. We'll get plenty to eat when we arrive."

Meanwhile Jakey had followed his father to the barn. Mrs. Slack stepped into the house to make up a bundle for the boy. Maynard and Souri sauntered aimlessly in the yard. Presently they found themselves at the wellhouse. Souri leaned over it and looked down into the well. There was something she wanted to say, but found it difficult.

"I thank you very much for what you've done for me," she said.

"Why, Souri, what have I done for you compared with what you did for me?"

"Didn't you find me a 'poor white' girl a year ago, and haven't you sent me to school with Jakey, and helped me to look into a world that would have been always closed to me except for you?"

"And wouldn't my world have been entirely closed to me except for you?"

Souri was silent.

"Souri, when you speak to me of obligation you remind me how deeply I am obliged to you. When I was imprisoned at Chattanooga, charged with being a spy, tried, convicted and about to be hanged, you came and effected my escape. Why, child, were it not for you my bones would this minute be moldering in the jailyard at Chattanooga."

"But Mrs. Maynard, she"—

Souri paused. She was bending low over the side of the wellhouse, her face in the palms of her hands, her elbows resting on the board beside the bucket, and looking down as though seeking for something in the dark disk below.

"She completed what you began," the colonel finished for her.

"It was more for her to do. 'Twasn't noth—anything for me. You uns—you was Union, and so was I. She was Confederate."

There was a depth of feeling in Souri which threw her off her guard and made it difficult for her to adhere to her training in expressing herself.

"Souri, I am indebted to two lovely women for every breath I draw. You opened my prison doors. She who is my wife concealed me when I was hunted for my life. Let us talk no more about it. The very mention of the narrowness of my escape gives me a choking sensation about the neck."

Jakey came trotting out of the barn on Tom, the rim of his felt hat flapping up and down at each step.

The farmer followed, and Mrs. Slack came out with Jakey's bundle. Then with a handshaking all around, and a "God bless you, my little girl," from Maynard to Souri, the two started on their way, not on foot, as on their former journey, but each with a good mount.

CHAPTER VIII.

JAKEY ENTERS THE ARMY.

The two wayfarers started in the direction the cavalry had taken, but after going a short distance Colonel Maynard reined in his horse.

"Stop a bit, Madge," he said. "I want to consult my staff as to the route." Then to his attendant, "Jakey, I think I know a shorter route than this."

"So do I."

"The one you and I took when we went to Chattanooga before."

"Ter bring back information," added Jakey proudly.

"We'll take it again. It's off the main road, and we'll be less liable to be murdered for our boots."

"Reckon," said Jakey, wrinkling his brow and drawing down the corners of his mouth with an intensely deliberative expression, as though, the problem having been submitted to him, it behooved him to consider it carefully.

They rode back past the house, and keeping on for about a mile turned into a byway. This they followed till they reached the Chattanooga road.

Colonel Maynard was in the most exuberant spirits. He had turned over the command of his brigade for a day or two to the colonel next in rank to himself and was on his way to join his young wife, from whom he had parted a week after his marriage. The two acted on his spirits like champagne. He laughed without having anything to laugh at; he bantered Jakey; he talked lovingly to his favorite horse, Madge. In short, Colonel Maynard appeared just what he was in years, little more than a boy.

His services as a scout had attracted the attention of the army and had led the general for whom he scouted to advance him. He had stepped from the ranks to a high position on the staff, and soon after, a cavalry regiment being badly in need of a lieutenant colonel, the colonel being inefficient and some junior officer being needed to practically command, Maynard was placed in the position. When the colonel of the regiment was got rid of, Maynard was made colonel. Soon after his command was attached to a brigade wherein he found himself the ranking regimental commander. This gave him the command of the brigade.

He entered upon his duties with misgivings. He knew he was well fitted for the duties of a scout, but doubted if he could command the respect of 8,000 men. Besides he knew there lurked within him a spirit of antagonism to conventional methods; he feared impulses that might wreck not only himself, but his brigade—perhaps a whole army. True, there was often a kind of illegitimate nobility about those impulses, but it did not render them any the less dangerous.

MEMORIAL DAY.

Sweet trailing arbutus,
Dear namesake of May,
Come, put forth your blossoms
And greet her today.
Come, wreathe your pink petals
With leaves of pale green,
To twine her a garland
And crown her your queen.

The herald of summer,
At close of the spring
'Tis then that the children
Your trail flowers bring

On graves of our heroes
To tenderly lay
And keep in remembrance
Memorial day.

MUSIC WON THE FIGHT

"I just was saying," said the major, "that the boys are getting into the old step again, and if we can catch a good swing from whatever band we get tomorrow we'll show the way for you old fellows in great shape."

"Yes; a great deal depends upon the band," said the colonel, reaching down to a drawer in his desk and bringing up from its depths a box of cigars. "A good band can put life into the lamest column, and I've even known a band to put life into a dead man. Fact! But here—light up. We'll make a short session of it tonight, for tomorrow calls us out early, but there's plenty of time for a cigar all round.

"It was—let me see—30 years and some odd months ago," continued the colonel. "The 'old regiment' was down in Virginia then, as I have said, and a merry time we were having of it too. There had been about two days' let up in the general unpleasantness, though, and we were beginning to wonder if the other side had emigrated. They hadn't—oh, no! At this time were all by our alone, off on a sort of side track, watching a road that came from nowhere in particular, but which was thought to be worth watching just the same. Our position was a beauty, and it was lucky for us that it was. I tell you, boys, it's about the same in war as in billiards—'position's everything.' The road we were watching ran almost exactly north and south. To the east of us, on our left, was a dense patch of woods, and on our right was another, with the added feature of a good sized swamp. In our front the ground was open for a distance of about 500 yards, and beyond that the unbroken woods began again. The clearing before us was of almost the exact shape of a fan, and we were at the point where the lines that would represent the sticks converged, so that in line of battle we stretched completely across from the woods on one flank to those on the other. Some 200 yards to our rear a road came into the one that we were guarding from a northwesterly direction, and at the intersection of the two was a forlorn group of tumble down houses, which collectively went by the name of Ashford Four Corners, apparently for no earthly reason, for there certainly were not four corners there.

"To tell the honest truth we didn't expect we were so far to one side of active operations that we should see or hear from the enemy, so long as we were lucky enough to be allowed to remain where we were. But we had been in the business too long to take any chances, and so we put in a day's work with the ax and shovel and laid out a very tidy line of breastworks across our front.

"We had a picket line in the woods beyond the clearing," he continued, "and felt pretty comfortable and safe, and so we went to work to amuse ourselves as best we could. I am free to say that most of us found our best amusement in going to sleep, for we had had a hard drive of it during the ten days previous, and it would have taken mighty lively surroundings to rouse much sporting blood in us. We had foraging parties out, of course, but what they found wouldn't have filled a haversack, and so we had to be content with what our few wagons had brought along.

"It was our second night in that position. I had been officer of the guard on the night before, and as a result I was sleeping in a very determined and businesslike way. But it didn't take any alarm clock to bring me out of my blankets when a shot came cracking out from the woods where our pickets were, and when another sounded, and then two or three together, I began routing out my men mighty promptly. Well, our drummers thumped out the long roll, and the regiment fell in, and presently back came the pickets with the report that the enemy was in our front and, so far as they could judge, in force. The night was pretty well used up then, and the first hazy light of the new day was just coming. But there wasn't enough of it to show what was going on across the clearing, and so we threw out skirmishers into the woods on either side of us and waited for the other fellow to show his hand. Apparently he, too, was a bit doubtful as to what might be in his front, and so as we stood behind our breastworks a half hour went by without our being able to detect a movement on his part. But all this time the light had been growing brighter, and just as we could begin to make out objects a skirmish line came out of the opposite woods and began to make its way slowly across the open. On they came for perhaps a couple of hundred yards, and then, seeing clearly for the first time our works, they halted, not seeming to have any great ambition to obtain a closer view, for you must know that by this time both the Confederates and we had learned that it was well to think twice about intruding upon a force well intrenched. However, these fellows didn't get much time to consider the situation, for we gave them a volley that left here and there a vacancy in their line, and back they went to the cover of the woods, firing as they fell back. But this little exchange of compliments was only a curtain raiser to the real performance, for in about ten minutes a regiment came out into the open, changed direction to the right and formed line of battle. Another followed it and formed line to the left of the road, and a battery came into position in the interval between them and unlimbered. We didn't care particularly for the two regiments, but the battery looked ominous, and the conviction was forced upon us that Ashford Four Corners was destined to become Confederate territory in mighty short order unless a heavier force than we could muster were placed between it and the gray line in front of us.

"But old Colonel Burleigh didn't seem to be much worried at the outlook, though he did seem a trifle in earnest when he turned to the quartermaster and said: 'Woodside, take my horse and get back to the brigade as fast as the Lord will let you! Tell the general that we've got a brigade to handle, and nobody knows how much besides. Tell him I'll try to amuse 'em all for an hour until he can get up, and while you're riding down, Woodside, you may as well ride like h—l!' He had no more than got the words out of his mouth when the battery opened on us, and nobody saw Woodside start on his errand, for we had plenty to attract our attention in front. Of course we did our best to reply to the civilities of our visitors, for, though 500 yards was good long range for the muskets of those days, it was yet hazard to be idle. But it was [illegible] work, and we felt the need of guns badly. Why, even a single section would have been a godsend to us then.

"I can't go much into the details of the next hour or half hour. How long it was, in fact, I shall never know, for in a fight of that sort one has no eye for anything except what immediately concerns him. But I remember, as if it had happened but yesterday, how I turned when a shell burst just over us, and I saw Whiting, my captain, throw up his hands, stagger and pitch forward upon his face. I was at his side in an instant, but there was nothing that I could do to help him, for, even before I got to him he was covered with blood from a wound that seemed to have crushed in the whole top of his skull. Poor old Whiting! I turned him gently over upon his back, gave just one look at him and then went back to my company, for I was the only officer left, our second lieutenant being then in hospital. Meanwhile there had come a short pause in the firing, and we felt that the next few minutes would bring the rebs down upon us in a charge. It was just at this moment that we heard the notes of a band playing in our rear, and presently the breeze brought them to us more clearly, and we recognized the tune that they were playing. It was our own band, and the colonel had ordered it to march from the rear up to our line playing for all it was worth in the hope that the Confederates might be led into the belief that we were being re-enforced. I cannot tell you, boys, the effect of that music upon our weakened line. We were all New Englanders—all Massachusetts men—and although some of us were a godless and careless lot, yet most of us, I think, had been brought up in the good old way and knew, if only by ear, the old 'psalm tunes' of our boyhood. So perhaps you may imagine what we felt when the band came toward us playing the Portuguese hymn—that grand old hymn beginning:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word.

"Boys, I never heard a march that sounded more like a veritable paean of victory than that glorious hymn, and in the midst of the smoke and dust and blood of the fight it brought us both hope and courage and gave us the feeling that no odds could be strong enough to crush us. Colonel Burleigh afterward told us that he had intended to give the word to the regiment to set up a cheer when the band got well up to the line. He never got a chance, though, for that order—for as the notes of the band came swelling on the wind the regiment rose as one man and shouted and yelled and yelled again until the woods echoed with the cheering. And then an inspiration came to our color sergeant, a giant of a fellow, with a voice like a trumpet, and springing upon the breastworks, holding high the faded and tattered colors, he broke into the second verse of the hymn:

"Fear not; I am with thee; oh, be not dismayed!
I, I am thy God and will still give thee aid.
I'll strengthen thee, help thee and cause thee to stand,
Upheld by my righteous omnipotent hand.

"It was magnificent. A hundred strong voices joined in with his, and up and down the line went the electric thrill that comes to men but few times in a lifetime.

"I've put a long preface before the story I started to tell, but the story itself will take but few words. I had joined in the hymn with the others and was singing away with the best of them when I heard at my side a weak voice trying to follow the air, and looking down I was confounded at seeing poor Whiting, whom I had thought instantly killed, leaning on his elbow and struggling along on the chorus. He was a ghastly sight, for his face was so covered with blood that his features were almost unrecognizable, and his hair was matted with blood and dirt around the gaping wound in his head. As I knelt beside him he sank back with a groan, but he kept muttering to himself, and now and again I caught a word or a sentence that showed him to be wandering in his mind. 'It's such—such a fair night, little girl.' I heard him murmur. 'Church was over early tonight, Mary. We'll go the long way round home. Your mother never will mind.'

"Poor old Whiting! I knew how hard it had been for him to leave the sweetheart on whom his thoughts were running then, and I remember wondering vaguely if it would be my duty to break to her the news of that day's work. Ah, boys, war is cruel, and yet this case was but one among many, many thousand. But, after all, this case did not turn out so badly, for when the 'old regiment' went through Washington in the grand review Whiting rode with us, and on his straps the silver bars had given place to the gold leaves of a major. And, by the way, I was best man at his wedding soon after we were mustered out. You see, the flying splinter of the shell that bowled him over had torn a frightful gash in his scalp, but the skull was not fractured, and so after a week or two in hospital he came back to us as well and strong and nearly as handsome as ever. And that, Charley," turning to the adjutant, "is the case in which I knew a band to call to life a dead man."

"But the fight, colonel—how did the fight come out?" asked the major.

"Oh, I forgot about that," said the colonel, pausing to relight his cigar. "Well, I suppose the band is entitled to the credit of stopping the fight, too, for the Confederates really were fooled by the music and the yelling, and while they were stopping to figure out just what it all might mean Woodside came galloping back with a couple of troops of cavalry and Morgan's battery, bringing word that the rest of the brigade would be up as fast as foot could carry them. But we didn't need them after all, for the other side made a masterly retrograde movement as soon as Morgan's guns were put in evidence. We learned afterward that we had been fighting a single brigade, but none of us ever complained because their force was no larger."—Boston Herald.

Glory Guards Where Valor Sleeps.

Our heroes—a mighty army of them—died that this nation might live. But the cause for which they perished triumphed, and triumphed gloriously. It is, then, not too much that on each recurring Memorial day this nation should, in its onward march, halt at the graves of its defenders. Nor is it too much—nay, it is small recompense—that we strew these mounds with garlands and roses and immortelles. In one sense we cannot honor them. No words of ours can pierce the portals of the grave, but we can honor the cause they espoused. We can teach our children to guard and protect the precious inheritance of liberty, which the suffering and valor of these heroes bequeathed to us.

After Bull Run.

The rout of the Federals at the first battle of Bull Run—or, as southern writers call it, the first battle of Manassas—was by all accounts overwhelming. A correspondent of The Southern Bivouac was soon afterward hunting in the neighborhood of Centerville, through which a great part of the Union army had fled. There he came suddenly upon an old woman who was doing her week's washing at a spring.

I drank at the spring, he says, and then sat down on a log.

"Did any of the Yankees run back this way?" I asked.

"Plenty of 'em," said she, stopping her work and holding a dripping garment in one hand.

"Did they give any reason for running away?"

"Oh, yes; I hyearn 'em say that masked batteries riz up out of the groun, and that thar was a hull division chargin on black hosses."

"They were pretty well scared, I suppose."

"Well, I should say so," replied the old woman as she laid the wet rag down. "Two of 'em come through my yard and didn't seem to notice me. They didn't have no arms, and mighty little clothes on. One of 'em was bareheaded and barefooted. Says he, turnin aroun and starin, 'Bill,' says he, 'take a good look. Do you see any holes in me?' Bill said he couldn't. 'Well,' says he, 'thank heaven I'm alive.'"

THE late frosts had a chilling effect on Sibley's presidential boom, or else the eastern winds have carried it into the Pacific Ocean.

AS CLEVELAND'S third term idea does not seem to take very well, he might make an effort to become president of some of the southern Republics.

LET Republicans stand by the principle of honest money. If the Democratic party desires to follow after the free silver god, it will only lead to their destruction.

UNDER the McKinley bill Philadelphia grocers offered granulated sugar at retail at 4 cents per pound. Under the tariff of 1894 the refiners of sugar expect to see it sell at 6 cents per pound.

COREA is in an unstable condition under which for some time to come it is likely that one opportune disturbance after another will make it difficult for Japan to retire and this is probably the object of the present row.

SINCE the income tax has been declared unconstitutional, can any one inform the people what has been accomplished by the Democratic Congress to which they can point with pride? Where has their last fond hope perished.

IN the death of the Hon Eckley B Cox, which occurred Monday of last week, at Drifton, Pa., the Democratic party loses one of its ablest men in the state He was considered an honorable man in politics, was an able business man and one of the most extensive coal operators in the country.

THE Supreme Court of the United States on Monday decided the income tax law unconstitutional The new decision sweeps away the whole act, and is more satisfactory than the previous one, which simply bit off certain sections of it, and made the weakness of the law more conspicuous. All that remains to be done now is to return the amount collected and discharge the officials who were specially appointed for this work. Already about $150 000 has been expended in collecting the income tax, and about $75 000 has been collected Another example of Democratic economy

REPRESENTATIVE GRIGSBY recently introduced and pushed through the House an act to honor the United States flag as the national emblem of a free people, and to protect it from domestic and foreign insult. It reads as follows "That no other flag than the stars and stripes, which is our national emblem, should be allowed to wave from the public buildings of our State except such as may be occupied by a duly accredited minister or consul of a foreign civil power to these United States, that at all public processions in this Commonwealth no red flag intended to represent anarchy shall be carried or displayed, that for every violation of this act, upon a conviction of a party or parties so offending, a fine of twenty dollars shall be imposed or imprisonment for three months in the county jail, or either or both at the discretion of the court."

THE posthumous growth of the free silver craze has been nipped in the bud by the late heavy frosts. "Coin's Financial School" has run the gamut and its strength is rapidly waning Its mushroom growth has been too rapid and it will go down almost as fast as was its wonderful growth. As sober second thoughts take possession of the people they will rapidly discover the fallacy of the new departure and come back to the principle of sound money "Coin's" crazy ideas on the money question caught the minds of a great many people, but under the light of sound reasoning which has been brought before the people by Mr Horace White, who has thoroughly dissected "Coin's Financial School," people will readily begin to see that Mr Coin was very misleading in most of his assertions. They had just enough truth to make them dangerous. So with Coin's statements, they were very alluring to the farmers and laboring men and certain leaders who thought there was an opportunity to ride into preferment on the back of a free silver horse.

COMPULSORY education in Pennsylvania is now the law. This is one of the best statutes ever enacted, and will have a tendency to elevate the ignorant classes in our State. Now that the entering wedge has been started, let the legislation go farther and establish institutions where useful trades can be taught to those who do not care to take up a professional career. A young man or woman with a trade has a fund to draw from that cannot be taken away. Riches may be left to them which may be squandered in a short time, but a trade is something that will remain as long as they live, unless by dissipation they sap their health away and use up their vitality By passing such an act our State legislators would be granting a blessing to our boys and girls that would be far reaching in its effect, as a good education and an excellent trade would go hand in hand, and be the means of bettering the condition of the poor people of our State. Take, for instance, Germany—she is the most advanced nation in the world as regards teaching trades to the young. Invariably when you find a German in this country you will discover he is a tradesman. By all means establish industrial schools.

Knights of the Maccabees.

The State Commander writes us from Lincoln, Neb., as follows: "After trying other medicines for what seemed to be a very obstinate cough in our two children we tried Dr. King's New Discovery and at the end of two days the cough entirely left them. We will not be without it hereafter, as our experience proves that it cures where all other remedies fail."—Signed F. W. IN MEMORIAM.

The mournful event is at hand. Kind providence with a lavish hand has spread the carpet of nature upon the broad surface of earth; the emerald green, the magnanimous gift of God is spread o'er the grave of the aristocrat and the plebian alike, the loving gift of a just and impartial God. Comrades, can we e'er forget the long and weary march when we take a retrospective view of the past, when that cold messenger of death stared us in the face, and when formed in line of battle the shrieking shell, the grape and canister and the whizzing minnie, yes, and the cruel Sharpnell, swept our ranks. Where was our dependence? First our God then our country and our flag, that flag whose mandates makes all tyranny tremble and upon whose beautiful folds all Europe casts a jealous eye It is a happy thing for a country when the lives of its defenders are thrown freely upon the field of battle and challenge its enemies. We have no blots to be concealed, no glaring faults which a love of truth forbids us to deny, no mean or equivocating action, no departure from a refined and lofty sense of honor, and none in which either the fear of man or the seductions of filthy lucre could tempt us to a deed which would destroy our own self respect and the respect of others.

There are none whose lives teach more impressively the great moral of the strength which public virtue gives than that of the patriot and soldier His was an instance in which greatness was achieved without the aid of those brilliant qualities that the world calls genius, but by what is far better, a sound judgment, a resolute purpose and a determination to crush treason in the bud. It is not surprising then that each step in the soldier's life should have been crowned with public honors.

Long and weary were the soldiers' triumphant marches, marches in which their steps neither faltered nor stumbled But, alas, for those who sleep in an unknown and unmarked grave beneath the skies of the sunny south, where that icy monster, death, came to clothe them while lying on the cold and pitiless battle field. When victory was the chief object of their aspirations, public applause spread its flame, but it came too late In vain did they pray for their friends to surround them with affectionate care when their chief earthly wish was to see their homes once more and die among them.

Life's busy scenes on this side of the grave have closed on them forever, but their deeds of valor yet remain to be told. Not by us, comrades, but they will be portrayed in the history of our nation, when it may become a labor of love to some of her sons to write the story of the nation's defenders. It will be told, too, and perhaps heard with most interest in the traditions of a family of which he was the ornament and pride. We cannot recall them, but let us preserve their memories. Let the young men of our country follow their example, and instead of insulting or casting some withering remark of ingratitude towards the old and decrepit veteran, treat them at least with common respect And let us all feel that these reminiscences are attended by the mournful reflection that our connections with them in this world are ended forever, and let us revert to those with pride whose fame and valor we justly to day commemorate

ELI PERKINS ON POLITICS.

A representative of the Statesman, Salem Oregon called on Melville D Landon (Eli Perkins) and the result is given in the following

"What are your politics?" asked Eli, looking over his glasses.

"Straight Republican," replied the reporter, modestly.

"Republican," replied Eli, savagely 'well, you have got gall—to come here to interview a rock ribbed Democrat a Randall Democrat What do you want me to say?"

"We want to inquire if you are altogether pleased with the work of your party?"

"Well—no—I'm not,' said Eli, scratching his head 'I'm not altogether pleased '

'Well, what is the matter?'

'I'll tell you, my son," said Eli slowly wiping his glasses, 'I'm afraid the party has gone back on us Randall Democrats I'm afraid they've lied to us. They said "Tariff for revenue" in the platform and then they let a lot of one-horse rebels from Tennessee and West Virginia knock Tariff for revenue into flinders. Why, instead of getting the revenue, we are running in debt $150,000,000 a year They told us they would not lower wages Then they cut the Tariff 30 per cent. and down went wages 30 per cent. and the boys are mad The Free Trade Democrats got us Randall Democrats by the throat They wasn't honest We were led into a trap—a Free Trade trap

'What other lies did the Free-Trade Democrats tell you?'

"They said Protection didn't protect wages nor create new industries, and they made us believe that tin couldn't be made in this country Why, up in Portland yesterday Joseph S Megler the great Washington salmon canner told me he had bought his tin from an American manufacturer for $4 85 a box when he always paid $6 50 for Welsh tin "

"Then," continued Eli, "when the crash came and our mills stopped and wages went down, what did those Free-Trade Democrats tell us? Why they lied again and said it was the silver The silver bill ' Why, the Republicans bought $419,000,000 worth of silver in thirty years and coined it and the country was prosperous. We put Cleveland in and he bought $67,000,000 worth of silver at the market price, 47 cents for a dollar, coined it, and put it out for $14,000,000 and we went all to pieces. The silver bill!' It was that undemocratic Free-Trade Tariff, and we Randall Democrats know it now "

"Well, what do you Randall Democrats propose to do?" asked the reporter.

"We can't do anything," said Eli. "If we were in power we'd put that Tariff back again. We'd stop selling gold bonds for 4 per cent. interest to Rothschild, but sell them to American Democrats at 3 per cent. We'd help struggling Hawaii We wouldn't sink a republic and put a negress on a throne. We wouldn't make wool free, kill our own sheep and buy $30,000,000 worth of wool in Asia. We'd keep our dollars at home. We'd put that bounty back on sugar and run sugar all over Texas, Louisiana, Nebraska and California and take out cotton. We'd put a Tariff on fine linen that is costing us $20,000,000 a year in Germany and Ireland, make the factories come here as did the tin factories and send flax all over Minnesota and Oregon and—by the way, I met one of those Free-Trade Democrats yesterday," said Eli, "up at Portland. He used to be a Randall Democrat, I said to him

"'George, what did you change for?'

"'Well, I've got a reason,' he said.

"'What was it?'

"'I'll tell you, I did it to disgrace an uncle of mine.'

"'What had your uncle done?' I asked.

"'He swindled me out of my inheritance and separated me from my family, and I just made up my mind that I'd become a Free-Trade Democrat and disgrace him.'

"'What is your uncle doing?' I asked.

"'He's pounding iron in the Salem Penitentiary.'

"'Well,' I said, 'you've disgraced him!'"—Economist.

—The L. O. T. M will serve meals in the Backus store, opposite the Court House, on Decoration Day. We trust that their Maccabee friends will not forget them on that day.

—All Maccabees in this vicinity are requested to join Smethport Tent in the parade here on Memorial Day. Report at Backus hall, opposite Court House at 12 o'clock of the 30th.

—All Odd Fellows are requested to meet at the lodge room on Thursday at 1 p. m. instead of 10 a. m. as announced last week, for the purpose of taking part in the Decoration day parade.

—Marshal Choate on Monday last showed us the Memorial day badges for the speaker, president and other officers, which he purchased at his own expense. They are beauties and no mistake.

—Last Saturday Mr. Latham showed us a photograph of the county officials at the Court House, which certainly is the finest we ever saw. Every face in the group appears as clearly before you, as though the originals were sitting in front of you.

—We were in error last week in stating that the Smethport Hose dance would be on June 11th. It should have been June 4th. Of course, everybody is sufficiently interested in the company's welfare to give the boys a good turn out. Everybody dance.

—The Olean Echo, a bright newsy sheet has entered upon its second year, and thinks it is old enough to wear pants. The Echo comes to us enlarged and otherwise improved. We wish Brother Raferty much success in his efforts to give Olean a newsy paper.

—Last week George Richardson and John Wilson, of Port Allegany, stretched 324 yards of cloth, hung 91 rolls of paper and used 12 pounds of tacks and one sack of flour in papering the boarding house at Bayers Mills, completing the work in five days. This is a record hard to beat.

—The ladies of the W. R. C. requests all who have flowers to spare to bring them to the residence of L. W. Dunn on Thursday morning, May 29. The ladies are very anxious that this request should meet with a hearty response, as they are very much in need of them for Decoration Day.

—Smethport Maccabees speak in terms of the highest praise in reference to the reception given them last Saturday night at Crosby by the members of the K. O. T. M., and of the banquet spread by the L. O. T. M. These fraternal visits have a very beneficial effect, and should be more frequent.

—The old Fourth of July committee will hold a meeting sometime during the week, at which time steps will be taken towards another celebration for this year. We expect to be able to give full details by next week. In the meantime keep in mind the fact that Smethport will do herself proud this year, and make your plans accordingly.

—In another column will be found the report of the business done at the creamery for the month of April. There is a marked increase in the amount of milk received over the corresponding month of last year, which is a good indication that the farmers in this section are beginning to realize the benefits to be derived from an institution of this kind.

—A Harrisburg correspondent to the Lewisburgh Saturday News says: The bill prohibiting the killing of deer for five years, which was passed by the House because everybody likes urbane Mr. North, its author, has been put to sleep in the Senate, where its slumbers will not be disturbed this session. Messrs. Reed, Bankey, Kleckner, Chambers, Harber and the other upper end sportsmen, will still have use for their rifles. We would like to have some evidence of their skill when next season's rake off occurs, or we will soon be led to believe that they are not much benefited by an open season, especially since we have been informed that one party of ten hunters from about Mifflinburg had thirty chances last winter and never got a hair.

—The creamery turned out two hundred and ten pounds of butter one day this week.

—Manley Kelley, an expert butter man from the Sharpless Separator Co. has been examining things at the creamery and as a result Mr. Hall reports many improvements.

—If there is any one thing that really tickles the editor of a country paper it is to have people get their job printing done by some little one horse job office, and then expect the man who runs a paper to give them four or five dollars worth of free advertising for every entertainment they get up. Editors like it, indeed they do.

—During a visit at F. G. Lindholm & Co.'s store the first of the week, our attention was called to their new line of shoes. They have all styles, all widths and a full assortment of sizes. In fact, they claim to have the largest and most complete line ever seen in this town. You might call and examine for yourselves.

—The ladies of the Swedish Lutheran Church will sell ice cream and strawberries on Decoration Day in the Nash building, opposite D. C. Young's store, for the benefit of the church. At the same place in the evening the ladies will expose for sale a number of fancy articles of their own make. Don't forget to call and see them.

—Since our esteemed host of the Grand Central, J. C. Breneman, has been appointed chief of staff for Memorial day he has been very much exercised over his duties, and buttonholes every veteran he meets in order to obtain all the knowledge possible for this occasion, and vows he will take a week off to study military tactics, in order to discharge the duties of his office with credit to himself and pleasure to his friends.

—The first of the week, while passing the pleasant farm of Mr. George Boyer, a few miles south of here, we were invited in to inspect his butter making machinery, etc., which we found to be very complete. The churn is operated by water power. Mr. Boyer says he has many customers in this town who will testify to the good quality of his butter, and to further satisfy us, presented us with a small jar of the article, which we found to be of a superior quality.

—S. C. Hyde, Esq., who was formerly a resident of this town, died suddenly at his home, in Emporium, on Wednesday. The deceased was the first Worshipful Master of McKean lodge, F. & A. M., and was a member of the bar of Cameron county. Mr. Hyde has relatives and friends here who will mourn his sudden demise. The interment will take place at Rose Hill cemetery on Saturday on the arrival of the noon train. The Masons will turn out in a body.

—Below we give the most important parts of the compulsory educational law: It is not a radical measure. Sixteen school weeks is the maximum of compulsory attendance, and that only for children between the ages of 8 and 13. A fine from $2 to $5 for each offense is imposed on parents who neglect to send their children of the age specified to school, according to the law. Truant officers, where necessary, may be appointed, to secure the attendance of all children between the ages of 8 and 13 within his district, giving the name, age and residence of each child, and whether in charge of parent or guardian, and certify the same to the secretary of the proper school district. For this the assessor will get the same per diem compensation as in the assessment of voters.

—The people of Smethport and vicinity would very much appreciate an evening train from here to Larabee. For instance, on the arrival of the Emporium train at Larabee at 3:15 p. m., have the train run back to Smethport and wait until 6 o'clock; then run to Larabee to connect with the train running south to Emporium, and then run the train to Olean. This would accommodate passengers going both ways, and do away with that long wait of four hours at Larabee. Another thing that would be highly appreciated is a little more steam on the evening train, so that passengers would get into Smethport before 8 o'clock or thereabout. Very often people here would go to Olean on business or enjoyment if a train would leave here at 6 o'clock in the evening, instead of two in the afternoon. There is travel enough over this branch of the road every day to warrant the railroad officials in granting some favors to its patrons, and this request is by no means unfair.

Wedding Bells.

On Wednesday, May 15th, was celebrated the marriage of Mr. James Bray, of Corydville, to Miss Eunice Young, of Farmers Valley, at the residence of the bride's mother. At six o'clock p. m., was the time appointed for the ceremony, and a few minutes previous to the time, the wedding march was very prettily played by Miss Edith Moody, during which the bride and groom entered together with the Rev. Waterbury Miller, of Andrews Settlement, who soon united the happy pair in marriage. There were about 75 guests present and after congratulations a very beautiful dinner was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Bray departed on the afternoon train for various places of interest in New York and Pennsylvania. They received many beautiful and costly presents.

Stocking the River.

The Rod and Gun Club of Renovo, received eight cans of young salmon and black bass, Friday, from the Erie hatchery, which were placed in the river opposite this place. The Club has received and deposited in the nearby mountain streams fourteen cans of trout fry, during the spring season. Mr. Wes. Blosser, a prominent member of the club, has been taking a leading interest in the good work which deserves the commendations of the general public.—Record. This is the proper spirit. Let our sportsmen do likewise and stock the streams here.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Art Amateur for May has two charming color plates—"The Watering Place," by J. Peyrol Bonheur, and "Decorative Groups," after Boucher. There are the usual eight large pages of practical Working Designs for Woodcarving, Pyrography, China Painting and Needlework. The number itself is especially one for the young illustrator. The frontispiece is very interesting, being a pen drawing by Thure De Thulstrup reproduced by the "half tone" process. Price 35 cents. MONTAGUE MARKS, Publisher, 23 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK.

An Important Item.

NARROW ESCAPES IN BATTLE.

Reminiscences of Close Calls Related by New Hampshire Veterans.

Most of the New Hampshire men here had an honorable record of service in the civil war, and when they meet their reminiscences are often highly interesting. A group of them were telling recently of "close calls." One said:

"I was talking with a comrade during an engagement when he suddenly fell of his side, saying, 'I'm shot.' I advised him to go to the rear. He soon returned, holding the battered remnants of a silver watch on the stump of his second finger, bewailing its dilapidated condition and the fact that the day before he had paid $25 for the watch. The man had been standing with his finger over the watch pocket in his trousers, when along came the bullet and cut off the finger and spent its force in the works of the watch.

"Later in the day," continued the narrator, "I lay down during some heavy firing, with my forehead touching the butt of two alder bushes, when a bullet buried itself directly opposite my forehead."

"The closest call I ever saw," said a man of 45 years' experience in the navy, who was with Porter during the civil war, "was when a shell came along and took off the head of the man next to me and stunned me for 15 minutes. And yet, while these escapes were constantly occurring, other men seemed to be followed by a fatality to be wounded at every engagement."

"I think I had the closest shave of you all," came from another of the group. "The governor of Maryland, who was my friend, offered me the lieutenantcy of a regiment then forming. I told him I had but one good eye. I couldn't see to dodge the bullets well enough. The friend who accepted the offer was killed in the first engagement of the regiment."—Washington Capital.

WHERE NAMELESS HEROES SLEEP.

Armies of Unknown Dead at Vicksburg and Fredericksburg.

The biggest national cemetery in point of population is the Vicksburg, where 16,633 heroes sleep, gathered from the scattered graves about the Union lines at Vicksburg and from neighboring fields and hospitals. Of these the known number 3,913 and the unknown 12,720. The Nashville cemetery comes close to it in number of dead, having 16,546 sleepers, taken from the hospitals and outlying battlefields, with a much smaller proportion of unknown. But Fredericksburg cemetery, which ranks next to Nashville in number of dead, is greatest and most melancholy of all in the number of its unknown. Of the total 15,274 soldiers buried there, 12,786—an enormous proportion—are nameless. The cemetery occupies Marye's heights, the celebrated intrenched position held by Lee when Burnside's troops charged and recharged against it in vain with such dreadful mortality. Under those circumstances the Union dead remained where they fell, and identification and burial by their comrades were impossible. Hither also were borne many bodies from the Wilderness and Chancellorsville.

The Vicksburg cemetery stands second to Fredericksburg in the number of its unknown sleepers, and next is the mournful inclosure at Salisbury, N. C., the site of the old Confederate prison pen, where, out of a total of 12,137 interments, all but 102 are unknown. When the place fell into Union hands, the dead were found piled promiscuously in 18 trenches each 240 feet long. These were opened and the bodies tenderly reinterred in an orderly manner.—Exchange.

The Rifleman's Tomb.

In the library of the war department is a photograph taken after the desperate battle of Gettysburg. It shows a dead Confederate sharpshooter away up in the rocks at Devil's Den, where he had constructed a secluded little fortress by building up bowlders between a niche in the rocky face of the den. From this well protected spot he had in perfect safety been picking off Union officers and men during the entire day, until, his fire becoming so destructive, a battery was ordered to direct several solid shots at his temporary abode.

One of these caused a splinter of stone to strike the rifleman on the head, with fatal results. The photograph was taken by Gardner after the battle, and the sharpshooter was found in his last sleep with a peaceful smile on his face, while the rifle which had done the damage was leaning up against the rocks. Three years afterward the photographer again visited the rifleman's last home. His skeleton was still there, and the rifle, although almost eaten away by rust, leaned against the rocks, while on his company roll and at home he was marked, no doubt, as "missing."—Exchange.

Last Salute at Appomattox.

There occurred a curious incident of which no mention is made in the books which have treated of the closing scenes at Appomattox. The muskets of the Confederates were allowed to remain stacked on the field. The grass caught fire in some way and was allowed to burn. So suddenly had the fighting ceased on the morning of the 9th that thousands of the pieces were left loaded. As the flames of the grass crept along the line of stacked muskets the guns were heated to firing heat, and soon there was incessant popping. The balls went up into the air almost straight until the force of the discharge was spent and then dropped down. To this day the field of surrender is strewn with these bullets, and so little has Appomattox been visited that the balls are easily found.

This firing of the muskets by the burning grass was the only salute that accompanied the surrender. When Lee had received Grant's terms and accepted them, the firing of 100 guns in token of victory was begun, but Grant quickly stopped it. —St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Memorial Day Observances.

Memorial day seems to have lost many of its features of sorrow. Not funeral dirges only do the bands play, but lively marches, ringing martial tunes and patriotic airs as well. Many of the thousand flags which float in the soft May breeze wave proudly from the highest points of their staffs and not at half mast. A simple knot of crape on the unfurled banners is the only emblem of sorrow. There is more of triumph, and joyful hope, and holy peace than of sorrow in the speeches.

Time, which has effaced from the bloodless battlefields of the awful fratricidal contest all traces of the dreadful wave of war, with its flotsam of sorrow and jetsam of corpses, has soothed the troubled souls of the bereaved. The sun of glory which shines above the dead dries the tears shed for them.—Chicago Mail.

THE SHARPSHOOTERS' DUEL.

One From Mississippi and the Other From Tennessee.

"The best rifle shot I ever saw was an east Tennessean, who acted as scout for the Army of the Cumberland," said Major R. B. Deer at the Southern. "His name was Brownlow, but whether he was a relative of the fighting parson of that name I do not know. Brownlow was a tall, lanky specimen of humanity and looked like a typical frontiersman. He wore a coonskin cap and carried a rifle a foot longer than himself, with which he could put half an ounce of lead squarely between a man's eyes at a distance of nearly half a mile. He fought for sheer love of it, was always hunting for victims and used to boast that he averaged a dozen dead Confederates a week. He hung on the enemy's picket lines night and day, and when Old Tom, as he called his lingering eternity of a gun, cracked there was certain to be a death.

"One day during a sharp skirmish Brownlow ensconced himself in a big cottonwood tree and was dropping Confederates as fast as he could feed bullets to Old Tom, when a Mississippi sharpshooter made a sneak for another tall cottonwood about 500 yards distant. The Tennessean spied him. There were two puffs of smoke from among the green leaves, and the two killers came down head first, with their long deer rifles rattling after them."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

T. F. Anthony, Ex-Postmaster of Promise City, Iowa, says: "I bought one bottle of 'Mystic Cure' for Rheumatism and two doses of it did me more good than all the medicine I ever took." Sold by A. B. Armstrong, Druggist, Smethport, Pa.
